

ABSTRACT

Methods and apparatus are disclosed for rapidly providing for a large number of closely spaced points within an area at right angle to the central trajectory of an ion beam data concerning intensity variations, emittance variations and angular variations of elementary beamlets with respect to the central beam trajectory. The technology is particular applicable to the application and control of ribbon beams used for semiconductor implantation.